A congress of Orthodox Churches met in Constantinople in 1923. One of the items was the "new" calendar which was not formally adopted by the Congress.

The Conferees in this tumultuous gathering agreed on nothing else either.

Since 1923 several individual churches in the East have adopted portions of the new calendar, including the switch to the Gregorian solar year.

They retain the old system for calculating Easter, and, to this day, celebrate Christ's resurrection on a different day than Christians in the West.
